THE COUNTER REVOLUTION TO POLITICAL CORRECTNESS HAS BEGUN IN BRITAIN

Peter Davies, the Mayor of Doncaster is enjoying increasing media exposure because of his "outrageous" agenda which, against all the tenets of consensual British politics, consists of doing what the public wants. In his first week in office he cut his own salary from £73,000 to £30,000, which is putting one's money where one's mouth is. He also scrapped the mayoral limousine. He is ending Doncaster's twinning with five towns around the world, an arrangement which he describes as "just for people to fly off and have a binge at the council's expense".

He intends to reduce council tax by 3 per cent this year. The "diversity" portfolio has been abolished from the council's cabinet. From next year no more funding will be given to the town's "Gay Pride" event, on the grounds that people do not need to parade their sexuality at taxpayers' expense. Black History Month, International Women's Day and the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgender History Month are similarly destined to become history. Council funding of translation services for migrants has been scrapped because he believes they should take the trouble to learn English.

Officials have been ordered to abandon bureaucratic gobbledegook language. Davies is saving the taxpayers £80,000 by disaffiliating from the Local Government Association and the Local Government Information Unit. He aims to abolish all non-jobs on the council, such as "community cohesion officers". He is taking advice from the Taxpayers' Alliance and the Campaign Against Political Correctness. He disregards all "green claptrap" and is creating more parking spaces to encourage traffic in the town for the benefit of business.

He has asked the Electoral Commission to reduce the number of Doncaster's councillors from 63 to 21 ("If Pittsburgh can manage with nine councillors, why do we need 63?"). You may be feeling disorientated, overcome by a surreal sensation, on hearing such extraordinary, unprecedented views. They are the almost forgotten, forcibly extinguished voice of sanity which most people had thought forever excised from British politics. These policies are common sense, which is something we have not experienced in any council chamber, still less the House of Commons, in decades.

The establishment is moving heaven and earth to discredit and obstruct Davies. He is the ultimate political embarrassment. If it is good enough for Doncaster however, it is good enough for Britain. Our politically correct politicians must be compelled to follow suit. There has to be an inflexible public will to enforce the country's wishes on the political class under pain of ejection from public life. That should be the sole agenda for the next general election. The mainstream parties, as currently constituted, are no longer electable.
